THE sharp controversy between ■ Britain and the United States over naval command in the Mediterranean in the Atlantic Treaty organisation appears to have been resolved by further British concession and the placing of command into American The scope of Admiral Carney's is limited—does not extend eastward beyond the Adriatic Sea-but even that modification will not easily silence the critics. No doubt the pros and cons were discussed between Allied chiefs of staff with good will and common sense, but recalling the heavy smoke screens which needed to be laid over the appointment of Admiral Fechteler to the Atlantic over-all command, American insistence on the Mediterranean Command will inevitably further measure of heartsearching. Attention is focused rather less on the underlying reasons for the decision than on comments such as that of Admiral Sherman, U.S. Chief of Naval Operations, in testimony before Senate MacArthur Inquiry Committee, about Britain's standing as a naval power. Admiral Sherman said, among other things: "Britain's naval'-

The Public Relations Officer's equintion which he quoted yesterday to demonstrate the impossibility of giving the jublic a domestic water supply from 9 to 10.30 at night instead of between 2.30 and 4.30 p.m. We cannot accept such a hypothetical argument. great to provide what is needed ... in the event of war." He added that control of the seas must in large measure be passed on to the United States. Speaking from facts and figures and as the American naval chief, Admiral Sherman was making effective points. But the significance stems mainly from his belief in British recognition of this changed status. In other words, even Britain's friends are accepting the devaluation which has grown out of the rapidity of British naval disarmament after the Pacific War. In that estimate, nevertheless, there rests a fallacy. Britain's capabilities at sea, as in everything else, are to be measured by Britain's resolution. In fact, her sea power, compared with anything she is likely to meet, is greater than it was in 1989. The personnel of the Royal Navy is every bit as efficient and gallant. But if nobody proclaims these things-and the Labour Government leaders seem afraid to assert them-how can we complain if the world believes we think otherwise?

Byron, Keats, Bhelley and Moore are not (as you might suppose) poets, but racing men. Each owns a horse which is named after one of the others; and each horse has been trained by a second member of the quartette (not its namesake) and is ridden by a third, who is not its namesake either. To put it another way, each owns one, horse; has trained a second one; rides a third one; and has given his name to a. It has happened, as it was bound to do sooner or later. "Sugar" Ray Robinson, world middleweight champion and reputedly the richest boxer in the world, has agreed to put his title at stake in a fight with Randolph Turpin, the British Champion, in London next month.

This rich prize is promoter Jack Solomons' big pay-off from the White City "Festival of Champions," in which we saw not only Turpin but Heavyweight Champion Jack Gardner, Cruiserweight Champion Don Cockell, and leading heavyweight contender Johnny Williams, in action against imported talent.

FRANCE WINS THE

Ascot, Berkshire, June 14.

France won the coveted Ascot Gold Cup today when Pan, owned by M. Emile Constant, came with a great run in the home straight to rob Mr Winston Churchill's grey, Colonist, of the £10,000 first prize.

Pan, starting at the long odds of 100 to 8 and ridden by the French jockey, Roger Poincelet, caught Mr Churchill's horse halfway up the home straight and, forging ahead, won by three lengths.

THE SOUTH AFRICANS THE OVAL

A brilliant sun shone from a cloudless blue sky as M.R. Barton led the Surrey XI on to the field for the first day's play in the match against the South Africans at the Oval. For the tourists it was a big occasion, the last match before the First Test at Nottingham. For the crowd it was a day to sit back lazily and watch yet another version of the fascinating bat and ball duel.

To the accompaniment of the clatter of trams, screeching and whining their way to and from the Festival of Britain site-about half a mile away-the tourists began their innings disastrously. Alec Bedser and Stuart Surridge are masters in the art of the new ball attack and between them they had the first three batsmen back in the pavilion for only 19 runs.

Longhurst On GOLF

Charles Coe, if he did not win the amateur golf championship, at least did one thing that has not been done for a long time. He set people talking once again _about style.

This may sound strange to followers of other games. Why, after all, should not people talk about style in golf? The answer is that for many years, largely through transatlantic influence and a utilitarian passion for effectiveness at all costs, the words of the familiar ditty "It's not what you do; it's the way you do it" have been re-

Batting for just a little over lwo hours, he amply tested his njured thumb. Off drives, on drives, leg glances and late cuts, Nourse produced the lot without even once looking in any trouble. So easy did he make it appear that one began to wonder why the carly batsmen had found it so difficult.

Shortly after the tea interval the South African innings closed for 209, not a big total by any means on an easy wicket, but better than one had anticipated in view of the poor start.

McCARTHY & MELLE

And then we saw those two young pace bowlers. MaCarthy and Melle, both of whom are at least a yard quicker than any other bowlers in England today. McCarthy, with a slight tendency to "throw" the ball, did not look quite so effective as Melle, who has a beautifully compact, action and follows through perfectly. So, on this occasion at least, it proved. For if the South African innings began badly, that was behind, this time on the off side; and off the fourth bail—no, not a wicket—he had Barton, the the latter in the Walker Cup | had so far looked a poor lot. My personal opinion was that the tourists have a fine opening attack and, it goes without saying that Mann and Athol Rowan (they did not play against Surrey), are two fine spinners. They are a very keen side in the field and play. the game as though they enjoy it. But, and there is always a
